The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 38, 39, 47-53, 58-64, 71-74 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(E) as being anticipated by Sivula, U.S. Pat. App. Pub. # 2001/0053687.

Sivula discloses a multimedia Message Services Center (MMSC-1). Sivula's Abstract discloses that the multimedia messaging service utilizes store and forward transmission, where the message addressed to subscriber – B is transmitted from the terminal of an A-subscriber to a sever of the MMSC. The arrival of the message at the server of the MMSC is reported to the wireless terminal of the B-subscriber (MSB). In P.0014, Sivula discloses that when a message is transmitted by the A – subscriber, it is first transferred to the MMSC where a short notification message is first transmitted from the MMSC to terminal B as an indication of the message that has arrived at the MMSC. In P.0034 Sivula discloses that the notification message can contain dial-up info on the modem number from which the message can be retrieved. Sivula goes on to disclose in P.0034 that the notification message can contain other info such as info on the sender, as well as the priority, type and size of the message. Sivula discloses that the notification message can be either SMS or WAP, P.0034. Sivula shows the Internet (13) being one of the networks to handle multimedia messages. By its very definition, multimedia messages include audio, video, and text. See Newton's Telecom Dictionary for a definition of multimedia.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 40, 42, 54, 56, 65, are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sivula in view of Evans et al, U.S. Pat. #7,200,680.

Evans et al disclose in claim 1 a multimedia message sent from a multimedia service center to a terminal. A notification is sent from the MMSC to the terminal via a Short Message Service Center (SMSC). To have provided Evans et al teaching of utilizing a SMSC in order to send Sivula's SMS message containing the notification would have been obvious to a person having ordinary skill in the art because the skilled artisan in the wireless messaging arts will realize that it will take a Short Message Service Center in order to deliver the SMS.

Claims 41, 43, 44-46, 55, 57, 67, 68, 69 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
